

Dionne Champion

Research Scientist
617-873-9600

Biographical Summary

Dionne Champion has her PhD in the Learning Sciences from Northwestern University School of Education. Her research has focused on the design and ethnographic study of learning environments that blend STEM and creative embodied learning activities, particularly for children who have experienced feelings of marginalization in STEM. She is interested in understanding the ways these populations draw on their everyday practices and use their bodies as resources.